

Palestinians and Jews Living Together in the "Oasis of Peace"

In a village between Jerusalem and Tel Aviv, Palestinians and Jews live together in peace. For over 20 years, residents of the "Oasis of Peace" have lived and educated their children together as equals. The village is home to a bilingual, bicultural Primary School and an internationally acclaimed conflict management program at the School for Peace.

You are invited to meet and hear Ahmad and Naomi as together they share insights and experiences about Palestinians and Jews living and working jointly.

Ahmad Hijazi first came to Neve Shalom/Wahat Al-Salam in 1984 as a teenager to attend a School for Peace youth encounter workshop. It was a pivotal experience in his life. He later trained as a School for Peace facilitator. In 1992, Ahmad and his wife chose to live in Neve Shalom/Wahat Al-Salam and he served as Mayor from 1995 to 1997. Ahmad is currently the Director of Public Relations in the community and a facilitator at the School for Peace.

Naomi Mark grew up in Neve Shalom/Wahat Al-Salam, where she attended the village's bilingual, bicultural Primary School until sixth grade. As a daughter of the village and an alumna of the school system, Naomi personifies how the village and its school can effect change in Israeli society. Naomi is an inspiring example of how the second generation of Neve Shalom/Wahat Al-Salam residents is making a difference. Naomi is now in her second year of voluntary service and working with the Israel branch of Physicians for Human Rights.
